

Sarah Keefe — Bango — March 12, 2009

With 245 million subscribers, it was only a matter of time before the US became the number 1 country in the world for mobile web browsing,” said Anil Malhotra, SVP of Marketing at Bango. “When it comes to payments though, the US is accelerating faster than any other country and now accounts for 57% of payments worldwide.

Christopher Borelli — Chicago Tribune — February 6, 2009

With a cautious eye on a dissolving economy, or out of simple frustration with an awkward tradition, an increasing number of Chicago diners say they are asking for separate itemized checks when they eat out with a group. Unless they are splitting dishes (and sometimes even when they are), they want to pay only for what they ordered.

Freeman Klopott — Washington Examiner — March 29, 2009

In New Orleans, a waitress at Bubba Gump Shrimp Seafood Co. was charged last week with selling up to 50 customers’ credit card information, The Times-Picayune reported. The waitress sold the numbers for $220 apiece to two men who provided her with a machine used to scan the credit cards.

Christopher Borelli — Chicago Tribune — February 6, 2009

The biggest headaches—or rather, the strangest—are coming from business lunches, restaurants say. Poag Mahone’s Olsen said, “They’re asking for all appetizers on this card, all entrees on this card and drinks on their personal cards because the company cut expense accounts.”

Freeman Klopott — Washington Examiner — March 29, 2009

In January, a Buffalo, N.Y., man was convicted of hiring several cashiers at local restaurants and a department store to steal customers’ credit card information, the Buffalo News reported.

Christopher Borelli — Chicago Tribune — February 6, 2009

Ina Pinkney, of Ina’s restaurant in the Market District, has seen a lot of hard staring lately: “I think the whole tone at the restaurant table has changed. At the beginning of the meal, you see internal calculations in their eyes. There are more sidelong glances when someone is ordering wine. Which is why, at the end of the meal, a party of five drops five cards for five separate checks.”

Amy Sarah Clark — The Jersey Journal — April 18, 2009

HOBOKEN - A man who posed as a waiter made off with $186 in cash from unsuspecting patrons at two restaurants, police said yesterday.

Freeman Klopott — Washington Examiner — March 29, 2009

Six servers at several Washington-area high-end restaurants stand accused of stealing credit card numbers from customers and running up a $750K tab at stores like Gucci.

Chexplit gives the patron (instead of the employee) more control over the payment process thus providing for a more secure and efficient experience.

Phone
+1 (978) 878-0202

Company Website
<http://www.chexoutsystems.com>

Product Website
<http://www.chexplit.com>

Email
sales@chexplit.com